

Julia Eastman
University of Victoria

Glen A. Jones
OISE, University of Toronto

Olivier Bégin-Caouette
Université de Montréal

Sharon X. Li
OISE, University of Toronto

~~University of Victoria~~

versities in five provinces in Canada. This article presents our findings with universities appeared to be coming from and to remain at different points on

Afin d'accomplir leurs missions, les universités à forte intensité de recherche doivent de maintenir les conditions nécessaires à la production et à la diffusion dans cinq provinces canadiennes afin de mieux comprendre comment les universités et les systèmes d'enseignement supérieur parviennent à préserver universités se situent à différents points sur un continuum autonomie/contrôle étatique, mais aussi que toutes les universités sont assujetties à un work and effective social status" (p. 11), and participation rates have increased through the provincial “system” through an exploration of system-level policy and governance. In our study we shift the unit of analysis down to the level of the institution: how do specific can we learn by looking across these institutional experiences in different Canadian juris

Our work has also been influenced by Pierre Bourdieu (1993), who distinguished between fields of restricted cultural production (where autonomous producers create cultural goods for other producers), and fields of large-scale production (where investments are driven by the quest for markets and profits, with production addressing pre-existing ties and differences amongst provinces and case universities; changes over time; implica

The great majority of Canada's approximately 100 universities are not-for-profit cor funding from provincial governments), there are major differences between institutions in terms of size and program mix, and the sector is highly stratified. At the top of the hierarchy are a handful of institutions that meet Altbach and Balan's (2007) definition of a case universities in this study meet this definition, being the flagship universities in their

there were also differences in several of the dimensions discussed below, the significance

Differences in the histories of universities in the five provinces and of their relationships be outside the control of government and hence outside the GRE. In BC and Alberta, they were within. In Quebec, charter universities were outside whereas the UQ was within the GRE. Because the universities in BC and Alberta were within those provinces' GREs, they had less authority over their finances than universities in Nova Scotia and Ontario, and residences) tended to be correspondingly less. Although charter universities in Quebec were outside the GRE, all Quebec universities were required by law to obtain provincial

All five provincial governments appeared to be seeking to align universities' activities or outcomes more closely with desired public policy goals. Officials interviewed in several for money, and alignment with government's public policy priorities" on the part not only official policy statements (énonc a government letter of expectation to universities). Quebec universities were required to sity officials both described the provincial government as expecting more from the universities, while reducing funding. In Quebec, the amount of legislation and regulation had increased dramatically over the course of the previous decade: government officials increased significantly. In Alberta, recent government initiatives had extended beyond to transform Campus Alberta into "a semi-official entity that allocated programs among ed entity with 26 moving parts [i.e., institutions]." The minister in question had, in the go to the world as "Campus Alberta," lower case university of Alberta. That would can't find you because you've been pushed into Campus Alberta, then quite literally

In BC, university boards were not allowed to borrow, sell assets, sign collective agreement approval. (Because of UBC's land holdings, it was effectively able to borrow from BC and Alberta, one of the factors driving increased regulation was inclusion in the Gov of provincial governments' reporting entities, with a few exceptions (e.g., UQ institutions and two universities in Manitoba). BC universities were moved into the GRE in the wake

Accounting Board (PSAB) Handbook.

ex of cio

chair and public members] very much like filling a human resource vacancy.. in government." In BC, the government appointed more than half the members of a university board ernment made appointments to the Dalhousie board only upon nomination by that board. With the exception of the rector, the members of the board of UQAM were all appointed Dalhousie, it was a requirement of the legislation that government do so.)

At five of the six universities, the president or rector was appointed by the board. At UQAM, the rector was formally appointed by the government upon the recommendation of the UQAM board of directors, but this took place after a consultation by means of a

UQAM, provincial governments did not play a role in the appointment of the president, in BC, presidential compensation required approval by the province's Public Sector Employ

There were differences between provinces in the ways that governments related to universities. In Nova Scotia, Quebec, and Ontario, presidents were the principal intermediary in meeting with a minister or other government official on a particular issue. In other provinces, the president was normally the president with whom government communicated. Depending on their (Fournier & Maheu, 1975). That said, the Parti Québécois government had chosen to put the PQ government had also introduced into the National Assembly in the fall of 2013 a would have affected not only faculty and staff but also students employed as teaching or research assistants. The rectors of numerous charter universities and the rector of UQAM of the type of legislative initiative (an extreme example being “campus carry” legislation between governments of different political stripes, there appeared to be variations in the viewees indicated that the Parti Québécois government in power in 2013 was in commu both “parties.”

incomprehension between university and government officials. To the latter, universities they received. For their part, many university officials interviewed said that members of capacity. (As one university official observed, lack of policy capacity could be a blessing: “In do, I’d be worried.”) The result, however, was that government policies were often out of and the need to orient people anew. A number of government officials acknowledged this

One long-serving official, who had had the opportunity of observing the interaction of provincial officials with university officials for many years, identified several factors that

- Deputy and assistant deputy ministers have complex and demanding jobs and tend
-

- Finally, governments and universities operate on different time scales. Whereas “governments change visions every time a new government is elected,” and senior officials naturally pursue what ministers want, universities tend to have longer-

An additional factor, identified by an Alberta official, was that in a province, the “revenue ability to provide that level of stability on an annual basis.”

universities embodied different traditions of university governance and autonomy. All at different points on the state supervision/autonomy continuum. By and large, universi some university officials in Quebec. Our interviews in Quebec began a year after the “Maple Spring” such a cataclysmic effect on society and government.

its election, the Parti Québécois government had convened a higher education summit holders interviewed had very different views on the policy issues at stake. Major changes of more government and/or union and/or student association influence or control over tion systems with very different traditions and degrees of university autonomy appear regulation and accountability measures, and the findings of our study confirm that pro

This study found significant variations in the external governance of Canada’s major “public” universities in five provinces. The case universities appeared to be coming from and to remain at different points on a state supervision/autonomy continuum. All the government reforms were difficult to initiate or sustain. However, this relative autonomy

Guidelines for board of governors members An introduction to board governance at Alberta's public post-secondary institutions.

Altbach, P. G. (2015). Massification and the global knowledge economy: The continuing International Higher Education, 80

Altbach, P. G. & Balan, J. (Eds.). (2007). World class worldwide: Transforming research universities in Asia and Latin America. Baltimore: Johns Hopkins University

Anderson, D., & Johnson, R. (1998, April). University autonomy in twenty countries
Canberra, Australia: Department of Employment, Education, Training and Youth Affairs.
Universities: British, Indian, African.

Governance of higher education: Global perspectives, theories and practices. New York, NY: Routledge.

Barendt, E. (2010). Academic freedom and the law: A comparative study.

Bourdieu, P. (1993). The field of cultural production: Essays on art and literature

Cameron, D. M. (1991). More than an academic question: Universities, government and public policy in Canada

Cantwell, B., Marginson, S., & Smolentseva, A. (Eds.). (2018). High participation systems of higher education

University Affairs/Affaires universitaires affairesuniversitaires.ca/opinion/en-marge/charte-des-valeurs-quebecoises-le-debat-

Fisher, D., Rubenson, K., Shanahan, T., & Trottier, C. (Eds.). (2014). The development of postsecondary education systems in Canada: A comparison between British Columbia, Ontario, and Québec 1980–2010. Montreal, QC: McGill-Queen's University Press.

scientifique Québécois. Sociologie et sociétés

Harman, G. (1991). Governance, administration and finance. In B. R. Clark & G. R.
The encyclopedia of higher education perspective from Britain. Higher Education Research & Development, 26

Jamet, M. (2014). Le gouvernement des universités au Québec et en France: Conceptions

Réformes d'hier et réformes d'aujourd'hui: L'enseignement supérieur recomposé

Higher education: Handbook of theory and research

New York, NY: Agathon Press.

Higher education in Canada: Different systems, different perspectives. New York, NY: Garland.

Leading research universities in a competitive world.

Montreal, QC: McGill-Queen's University Press.

Lang D. W. (2005). Financing higher education in Canada. In S. O. Michael & M.

Financing higher education in a global market (pp. 71- 118). New York, NY: Algora Publishing Levy, D. C. (1986). "Private" and "public": Analysis and ambiguity in higher education.

In D. C. Levy (Ed.), Private education: Studies in choice and public policy

New York, NY: Oxford University Press.

International Higher Education, 80

Report on the University System.

Julia Eastman is Adjunct Professor in the Gustavson School of Business at the University she held various administrative positions at Dalhousie University from 1982 to 2003 and